MAIL SUPPLEMENT TO THE HONGKONG FREE PRESS

HONGKONG, WEDNESDAY, APRIL 20th 1922.

THE FOREIGN OFFICE AND MISSIONARIES IN CHINA.

While we are prepared to insist most strenuously on the right of the missionaries in China to be protected from outrage, arson, and murder, and that their converts should not be subjected to persecution, yet we are bound to admit that some of them have not shown inviolable tact and discretion in proclaiming their message. Many young missionaries have of late been sent out to China whose zeal has been untempered by discretion, whose experience has been nil, and who should have been content to sit at the feet of some Gossamer several years longer before entering a field so difficult as China, where Confucian philosophy and rank materialism hold such unquestioned sway. Unfortunately many good people at home conceive they have had "a call" who did not know it, are wholly unqualified to take part in mission work and least of all in China, where special qualifications are needed. How few, for instance, are really capable of acquiring a proper mastery of the Chinese language! They can learn the characters, and they can to some extent make themselves understood in the simple language of the coolies; but they perpetually stumble over the tones, having perhaps no ear for music, and completely fail to give any sensible explanation of the Scriptures. Great care should be exercised in selecting missionaries, and this is the case with some societies, who are aware, but there are others who, as our Shanghai morning contemporary says, think more of quantity than quality and are only solicitous of pouring a big stream of labourers into a vineyard they neither mistakenly, we fear—deem to be as promising as it is extensive. This being the case, the few simple recommendations sent out by the Foreign Office for the guidance of missionaries in China are anything but superfluous. Lord Salisbury is a good Churchman and cannot be suspected for a moment of anything but friendliness to missions; and this is sufficiently shown by his having consulted the Archbishop of Canterbury before despatching these suggestions. With reference to the inspection of schools and orphanages, this is certainly desirable, in the interests of the missionaries, as it would necessarily disperse into this air the monstrous stories which the liberal and official like Chon Hax have studiously propagated. This suggestion applies of course to Protestants and Catholics alike. Let the Chinese government and officials see for themselves how the poor wails resound by Christian charity from misery and starvation are cared for by their protectors and how they are being brought up to lead useful and profitable lives. There will then be less opportunity, though doubtless the desire will not be wanting, to concoct foul and filthy slanders concerning those who are endeavouring to the best of their ability to teach a higher and less dreary creed than that of either BUDDHA or CONFUCIUS.

The next suggestion, to the effect that "Bible Societies should refrain from circulating uncommenced translations of certain books of the Bible, such as Joshua, Judges, Ruth, the Song of Solomon, etc., which contain passages easily open to misrepresentation if unexplained," will recommend itself to all missionaries of good sense and experience in China, though it will no doubt be regarded with pious horror by some bigots both out in the East and at home. The difficulty of making a sensible and understandable translation of some parts of the Old Testament need not be dilated upon; it is known to all Sinologists, and foreigners wholly unacquainted with the Chinese characters and their hideous nature can easily conceive what sort of interpretation, cynical and often sensual, some Chinese might put on such a book as the "Song of Solomon" issued in Chinese dress without comment or explanation. Moreover the Chinese are inherently sceptical, and naturally disinclined to take statements at trust which appear illiberal or opposed to natural laws. Too great care, therefore, cannot be exercised in the way that the Scriptures are presented to them. The recommendation about the careful consideration of Chinese prejudices and superstitions in the form and height of buildings erected is also judicious. The disavowal with which Chinese regard lofty towers or buildings is well known, and has been illustrated by the will that so long prevailed against the handsome Roman Catholic Cathedral in Canton. The Chinese have an admiration for Gothic architecture, and the only architectural ornament of the City of Peking is in vain so far as the natives are concerned, who if permitted would tear it to the ground to-morrow. The celebrated Wai Shih Shan cave at Foonchow also arose out of a dispute connected with the buildings of the Church Mission there and caused a great deal of bitter feeling for some time in that city. Lord Salisbury is also anxious to impress upon the missionaries the desirability of not interfering in disputes between their converts and non-Christian natives, a matter sometimes of no little difficulty, as the converts not unnaturally look to the missionaries for protection, advice, and assistance. The missionaries require to exercise great tact and judgment in dealing with such cases, and the advice now offered will doubtless render the careful amongst them more careful than ever and may render the heedless and impulsive more discreet. The question touched on in the closing paragraph is one that chiefly affects the missionaries of the China Inland Mission. It is open to question whether it is desirable that any of the missionaries should discard their national costume in favour of the native dress. One much-travelled missionary stoutly maintains that by doing so missionaries forfeit a good deal of respect from the natives, and he also asserts that they are positively safer from insult when dressed in their proper costume. In proof of this he instances his own experience. He travelled in European dress all through Hunan un molested, and was treated with respect, whereas other missionaries dressed in Chinese clothes have not escaped detection and insult. This, however, is no doubt a matter for argument, and others may have had an opposite experience. But there can be no question as to the extreme undesirability of young unmarried female missionaries fresh to the home questioning in clothes they have no idea how to wear with dignity or grace, and who unwittingly commit innumerable solecisms in Chinese eyes in their clumsy attempts to appear to the manner born. In fact, the prompt despatch of these female griffins to the interior in any costume is to be deprecated. They should first undergo a course of training in Hongkong or Shanghai to fit them for the work they are expected to do. The zeal for the conversion of the heathen, as they are wont to call the adherents of the great religions of Asia, is not alone sufficient to carry the most ardent of Christian evangelists to success, and the lack of other qualifications in so many of the workers may in some slight measure account for the very limited results achieved.

THE STRAITS GOVERNMENT AND THE PAHANG REBELLION.

The recurrence of rebellion in Pahang ought to furnish the Governor of the Straits Settlements with food for serious reflection. Sir Cecil Sturtz seems to have fallen into the mistake—only too common with Englishmen—of despising the foe, with it is to be feared, rather disastrous consequences, two unoffending Englishmen having already fallen victims to this misplaced confidence. Pahang is an important state, but is very thinly populated, there being only some 53,000 inhabitants, of whom about 50,000 are Malays. Of course it is not to be supposed that such a handful could long resist British military power, and possibly His Excellency put his trust in the loyalty of the Sultan, who ought, he would argue, to know well enough the folly of attempting to throw off the protectorate established. But the Malays of Pahang have, after all, had but scanty proof of the extent of British resources, and if they estimate them by the strength of the garrison of Singapore they may perhaps in measure be excused for their folly in heeding the lion. If they possess no heavy battalions and few arms of precision they have one advantage in the impenetrable jungle, a means of retreat which may enable them to give a deal of trouble before they are pacified. It is only necessary to turn a glance to the state of Aceh, on the other side of the Straits, to see what can be effected by dogged resistance in a country covered with dense jungle. For more than seventeen years the Achinese have maintained the struggle with the army of Netherlands India, and though oft defeated are still unconquered, still defiant. We do not suppose for a moment that such a result would have followed a contest with British arms, but the Achese war serves to show that even a weak rebellion may cause serious trouble and lamentable loss of life, when maintained in a difficult and tropical country.

The policy of Sir Cecil Sturtz has been very adversely criticised by the Singapore papers, and though we think some of the statements and speculations which have appeared in print have been of needless alarmist character, there seems little reason to doubt that His Excellency has shown great unwillingness to call in military assistance. Unfortunately, too, at the time the news of the murder of the two Europeans HARRIS and SCHWARTZ and of the threatened attack by the Panglima Muda JEMPAH on Pekan, the Governor was absent in Penang, and his Deputy would not take the responsibility of despatching a combat to Pahang. The Straits Times is very severe on what it considers the failure of the Governor's policy, and repeats some remarks made on the 15th February last, when it condemned the Governor's reliance on Asiatic allies as a policy of risk, to show how those remarks have been justified by subsequent events. Our contemporary then goes on to say:—"In plain words Sir Cecil Sturtz has trifled with this rebellion 'until what might have been settled by a mere parade of English forces threatened to become a most troublesome and costly and long drawn out, unproductive war.' And still while the magistrate in charge of 'Pekan is asking for help to enable him to hold that post help is delayed. The Deputy Governor received a despatch asking him to send forces to Pekan, and twelve hours later nothing has been done to despatch such forces save by the action of a naval officer who has got up steam on his ship. 'No Governor's order and to the military authorities there has been no communication whatsoever. We do not in the least blame the Deputy Governor for that. . . . But the responsibility resting on Sir Cecil Sturtz is heavy. He has trifled with a rebellion in what is almost English territory. He has left the seat of administrative government at a time when he ought to have known that his presence might be most necessary. And still, at the end of a telegraph wire, he delays to send the instructions which would have despatched a war-ship to a port where Englishmen are in danger.' Whether the strained relations which have existed between the Governor and the Officer in Command of the Troops in the Straits Settlements may have had any effect in impeding the former to seek military advice in connection with this rising in Pahang we are of course unable to say, but it is just conceivable that it may, perhaps almost unconsciously, have influenced his mind. However that may be, the result is to be deplored, and we trust that Sir Cecil Sturtz, whose sagacity is rarely at fault, will be quick to see and rectify his mistake. For that it is a mistake to undervalue a foe needs little demonstration, more especially when that foe is both ignorant and crafty. A very small measure of success is apt to excite the judgment of the natives and to fan into strength a movement which a sharp initial check would have effectually repressed. Mr. BERRY, the manager of the Ramb mines, who arrived in Singapore on the 8th inst., and who is not alarmed for the safety of Ilang, is reported to have said, in reply to an interviewer:—"There will be a 'general rising throughout the state.' Why? You cannot speak to a Malay in the country who does not sympathise with the ex-Orang 'Kayah.' He cannot understand why the Straits Government persists in treating the movement as one of little importance and evidently regards the situation as critical. The loyalty of the Sultan to the Government is also very generally doubted in the Settlements. Mr. BERRY has no belief in the Sultan's good faith, and he gives his reasons for this in the following brief recapitulation of the events attending the supposed extinction of the ex-Orang 'Kayah' revolt:—"The Sultan with the British Resident, accompanied by six or seven hundred men, went up thither from Temorloh, as far as Bentong, and they never made an attempt to capture the ex-Orang 'Kayah.' They remained at Bentong a couple of days and then returned down the river direct to Temorloh. The Sultan simply lounged back in his barge, and as for rooting out the ex-Orang 'Kayah' that apparently never entered into his head. The ex-Orang 'Kayah' quickly watched the expedition from a secure place in the jungle. After this little excursion up the river news was sent to Singapore that the rising was at an end. The Sultan's men plundered right and left on the occasion. On the strength of this unqualified 'trip up the river Mr. BERRY came to the conclusion that there was no further need to trouble and quickly set about packing up his traps for Singapore." The Free Press asserts there is a widespread and unshakeable conviction among Europeans and Malays alike that the Sultan has been playing a double game with the Resident, and considers that if Mr. BERRY cannot get the Sultan to co-operate with him in maintaining order and protecting the lives of Europeans in the state some one must be found who can. The British Government will be loath to depart from the system of protectorates set up and on the whole so successfully maintained in the Malay States, but if all the Pahang chiefs are tarred with the brush of disaffection it will become necessary to formally annex the state and govern it as Malacca is governed by a Resident Councillor. There would be no difficulty in doing this, and the advantages would be considerable to the state. The mining industries would be more likely to thrive because roads, railways, and other public works would follow on annexation, while a greater feeling of security would at the same time be induced by the establishment of a stable government. And considering the large interests present and prospective acquired by British subjects in Pahang, its immense and half discovered mineral resources, and its fertile soil, it is earnestly to be hoped that there will be no vacillation or half-heartedness in dealing with the question of its future.

Drainage Works, Markets, and Slaughtering.—Nothing occurred during the month calling for comment.

Health Districts.—Two cases of small-pox were reported during the month, both terminating fatally soon after they were reported. This pointed to the probability that the outbreak of small-pox was a fatal termination was anticipated. Careful enquiry was made in each case and although the nature of the disease must have been evident from the symptoms, it was only reported when the patient was reported ill. It is thought that there was no serious case, but that there had been a greater delay than is to be expected from ignorant people dealing with a disease so clear and distinct. Until taken to the hospital, the patient was only reported when the patient was reported ill.
